end of page 73- you were on the water waggon". "No When Adams got tight he used to dropped the whip. play up merry blazes and no one dared go near him. He was a powerful He was a real good chap. I remember one day at dinnet someone upset him and he stood lad too. Another up and brought his fist down on thw table with such force that the hard case was also dished just rattled. It was then time to call the only man who could manage him, a very small and weak looking chap by the bame of White. great big powerful "Come on White you had better take care of you pal before he gets into trouble2 Up would jump little White and walking up to Adams would say "Come on ol pal you have had enough". Adams would follow little white as meak as a lamb and go off to his room. I was due for transfer to Gullane Drome just a few mile South of

61 77 74

Edinburgh as they were very short of instructors having had a couple killed lately.

Before going however I got a weeks leave and went down to London. As usual all the hotels were booked in but I went along to the R.A F head quarters in the Hotel Cesil on the Strand knowing that all hete! hotels had to keep a certain number of rooms for them until 8 P.M. I knew the drill for when asked if you were on leave was 'No' but if you said you were on duty they would phone a hotel and ask them to book you in.

The morning after arrival, it was a Monday, I went along to Cox's Ber Bank, into which our cheques were paid each month, to cash a cheque. There were quite a lot of girls in the bank, some pretty and some tough looking, and when I remarked to teller who had just been to check my account before cahing my chaque, that there seemed to be a lot of the fair sex in the bank that morning . 'Yes' he said they have all come to cash cheques given to them by their boy friends who had spent the night or week end with them-and all accounts have to be checked before payment is made'. Just then the next teller told the girls that he was very sorry he could not cash the cheque as the officers had no credit.' She made a hell of a fuss and quite unashamedly said to him - "Well I have been raped amd he seemed such a fine lad. Gave me a big box of chocolates and that is all I got for entertaining him for the night.' Had it been present day she would probably have said 'Have you a Barclay Card?'

I went to a couple of shows including that popular show which-earried on right through the war "The Windmill'. This show has now closed down, a show which was seen by practically every one who went to London.

WellI returned to Edzell to pack up and go to Gullane from where I was later to return to South Africa.

Shortly after my arrival in Gullane the Armistice was signed but as there had been no peace treaty signed the policy was to continue training pilots. I had five on S.E.5 and 2 on Camels and two on initial raining on Avros.

We had here a very fine Commanding Officer who arranged for the duty lorry going into Edinburgh with mail etc. and returning with goods for the drom, to leave the drome immediately after lunch and leave the Railway Station in Princes Steet, Edinburgh, at IIp.m. This enabled a few chaps to go into the city to a show and get a lift back. There was also the privelege of arranging for a seat for the return trip only. In the latter case I would fly an Avro Machine with an advanced pupil to land in a field at Arthurs Seat, on the outskirts of Edinburgh, and there catch a tram into the city and later return in the duty bus. The Avro would then be flown back to the drome by the pupil. This worked very well.

There were in the City two families that I knew very well from East London-George Davidson a farmer from Impetu, Komgha who was there serving with the Ministry of Munitions and the other was the late Douglas Wislon's family. He was serfing in the Army.

I spent many a day on Davidson farm shocting partridge and Bush Buck. The Bush Buck shooting I did not care for so much as one stood outside some thick bush in a valey while beaters chased the game out. I was used to going after game and shooting out in the warm little chance of gervival if