

seen. Lorna says Brutus was outstanding, maybe it was his looks, and John Guilgood as Cassius and Mark Anthony were good, or rather grand too. We all of course know Mark Anthony's stirring speech or oration. "I come here not to bury Caesar" etc. It was stirring. Harry Taylor, who I have mentioned before, was there with his wife and he said he was thrilled as it brought back memories of when he once played Casius. While waiting for the show Harry and his wife joined us and there was much talking and laughing. He told us he had no trouble in getting tickets as he had a letter of introduction from his friend Gwen rancis Daines and that did the trick. We are going to Henry VIII tonight. We are not keen on going to the theatre two nights running but this is the last showing before we leave.

As we were taking the Vicar's wife as well as Edith and Mary I was up bright and early to take my place in the queue. Unfortunately they only allow each person four tickets I took the extra one for standing and hoped that I could perhaps sit on the steps. It was only the second half of the play that Lorna and I really wanted to see as the first part, as mentioned earlier we had seen when the King and Queen attended.

We went into Stratford fairly early so as to have a light supper before the play. The women folk enjoyed the play but as I did not fancy standing right through I took myself to the Bio to see the news reels etc. and then took up my standing seat after the interval. The place was packed.
